2. (a) Having heard some positive reviews of how one can "earn" some extra bucks by lending online at higher rates, Mr. Surendra Mistry, age 31 from Mumbai decided to try his hand at lending money on a P2P platform. That was in November 2018. Tempted, he withdrew ₹ 1 lakh from his fixed deposits that had just matured and used the money to lend to borrowers who came with a low-credit rating of between 'D' and 'F.' P2P platforms, typically, profile and then rate borrowers depending on their repayment and borrowing history, bank balance, income levels and so on. A borrower with an 'A' rating is considered to be the best of the lot; amounts lent to such borrowers fetch the lenders around 10 to 12 per cent. A person with an 'F' grade (known to be of the weakest credit profile) gets to borrow at a rate of around 25 per cent. Says Surendra, "With the greed to earn higher returns from lending on P2P platforms, I decided to lend to lower-risk-grade borrowers."

The lending amount ₹ 1 lakh was divided among 20 borrowers. "In the initial two months I received the monthly instalments on a specific date assigned by the platform. However, afterwards, some of the borrowers started postponing instalments and others defaulted for a couple of months," says Surendra. Within a span of one year, he could recover a meagre ₹ 20,000. This amount included principal and interest. He couldn't recover remaining amount. (CO1)
